Summary: This is a small poem of how Hiccup looks at Astrid, the first part of 2 stanzas kind of refers to the moment in the first few scenes of the movie where they are fighting the dragons and Astrid has a fire billowing behind her in the shot. I think that those of you who like poems would like this one.

She's My Girl

She's My Girl

There is this girl,

She has these blue eyes,

They make you want to smile and blush all in one time.

She has this hair,

It almost is if she is in a movie,

It's so blond and free.

She has this dark side,

But she has a caring one too,

You have just got to get close enough to touch her heart.

She's not emotional,

She hides from all of the emotions but one.

Anger.

She always is frustrated for things unknown to me,
She always dealt with her problems head on,
No turning back.

She always is violent,
Never uses her voice in an agreement,
She is a female Viking.

And I never thought how close I would get to her,
How marvelous she could be,
Until she rode with me and toothless.

She knows what I want,
She knows what I want to say,
She understands me more than some.

She's a person,
No more than that,
She's mine.

My female Viking,
Her name is Astrid.

End
file.
